

POLITICAL CORRECTNESS

Hank Van Joslin

You and I, the ordinary American citizen, have only recently been faced with what can be life or death situations right here at home. When I say "at home," I mean right here at your front doorstep, down the street at a friend's house, at your child's school function, in a restaurant and just about anywhere else where you used to feel safe and at home. Sadly, if we don't start to speak up, anyone of us can become one of the next victims.

All this ridiculous "political correctness" is not making us a more fair and free society; it has made us a nation that is struggling to protect its citizens.

Don't be the one that because you were reluctant or maybe even afraid to report suspicious activity that you then have to live with the guilt having said nothing and therefore someone's innocent loved one was hurt or killed. Please be vigilant and tell the authorities when you see something that is odd.

